OCTOBER 2014 E-NEWSLETTER #2

Ebola in the News

The situation regarding a potential Ebola outbreak migrating to North America has many people on edge. The reports of a second healthcare worker in Texas testing positive for Ebola and the fact that she took an airplane trip the day before her symptoms commenced has heightened the anxiety level. Although the Centers for Disease Control continues to insist that the chance for a widespread breakout is low, people are naturally curious and trying to get some contingency plans in place. Unfortunately, that process has been hampered by constantly changing recommendations from a wide variety of government resources. To put it mildly, the information about Ebola coming from the Canadian health officials and the primary U.S. regulatory agencies (OSHA, EPA, CDC) has been "fluid".

As such, Wonder Makers is offering information, gleaned from a variety of credible sources to assist our contractor and commercial clients in understanding the risks and potential response options. Click here to read the entire article.
